

Melleth

THE ONE THE FLOWERS WAIT FOR

Melleth is found where the meadow is warmest and the clover grows thickest — curled on a sun-warmed stone while dandelions lean in around her as though listening.

She does not hurry. That is the first thing those who find her notice. While everything around her rushes — bees to their work, petals to the wind — Melleth rests, and watches, and waits with a patience that feels almost like trust.

Her body is deep matte black with vivid amber-yellow stripes, and between each segment grow small tufts of sunflower petal, soft and golden. Her wings are white and translucent as onion paper, veined like pressed flowers.

She appears when the growing season is just finding its rhythm — the sign that the flowers have decided to stay. Those who see her find they slow down without meaning to.
